RAILROAD LIQUIDATION.

The efficiency with which the liquidation of the government's railroad obligations has been carried forward is a striking example of what full discretionary power, lodged in a single body, can do as compared with the system of that power among a commission. The process which has been achieved by Director General Davis, as disclosed in the president's letter transmitting his report to congress, must be attributed in large measure to the simplicity of the organization created to deal with this great problem. Power commensurate with his responsibilities was lodged in the hands of the executive at the head of the railroad administration, and he was thus able to create an instrument 100 per cent effective, to eliminate "red tape," to demand action and obtain results.

With the prediction that between 80 and 90 per cent of all claims of the carriers should be adjusted during 1922 and that the end of the calendar year 1923 should witness the conclusion of the work and the termination of all the affairs of the existing administration there will be general satisfaction. An immense amount of work has been accomplished to the satisfaction of the government as well as the carriers, without litigation, and the greatest single act of liquidation in the entire history of the world now concludes with satisfying evidence that all expense is to be ended and that no further appropriations from congress will be required.

So great an achievement during a period of economic uncertainty and stringency is its own monument. It is a stupendous thing which has been done. Claims of the railroads aggregating $450,000,000 in round numbers have been adjusted by the government upon a basis of settlement amounting to $133,694,353, representing 116,099 miles of main line mileage, or virtually 50 per cent of all the main line mileage under federal control. This work of liquidation has been accomplished with economy to the government, amounting to many millions of dollars. It is a commendable record of governmental efficiency.

SHAH PERSIA THINKS HE IS GENUINE POET

(By Associated Press.)

LONDON, March 2.—The young Shah of Persia, who recently left his capital, Teheran, for another trip to Europe, is said to hold a high opinion of himself as a poet. In a letter to a friend, he wrote: "I am a poet, and I consider myself a poet, and I consider myself a poet."

As the story is told by the Morning Post, a British minister at Teheran called on the Shah at the request of English admirers of the great Persian poet and asked that he might be permitted to see a copy of his work. The Shah, who is a poet, showed him a copy of his work. The Shah, who is a poet, showed him a copy of his work.

MAKING GOLD ACCOMPLISHED BUT TOO COSTLY

(By Associated Press.)

IOWA CITY, Ia., March 2.—The recent claim attributed to a German chemist that he had perfected a process for making gold from other metals, has brought forth a statement from Dr. Charles R. Keyes, Dean of the University of Iowa, that the University of Iowa demonstrated in 1893 that lead could be changed into gold by electrolysis two atoms of the lead molecule.

Dr. Keyes states that the problem was worked out mathematically by Dr. Hantzsch and that at a later time the University of the subject was actually demonstrated. It was found, however, that the process was so costly that the artificial gold was nearly twice as expensive as natural gold.
